

About the show: “Things My Mother Taught Me”

Type of comedy: Romantic Comedy

Plot: A young man and woman are moving into their first apartment together. It's halfway across the country from both sets of parents, so imagine their surprise when everyone shows up to help on move-in day! A comedy about young love, old love and families, Things My Mother Taught Me takes a closer look at relationships and the very important lessons moms and dads pass on to their kids without even knowing it. The show examines the younger set and their relationships to the –shall we say – “mature” set! In the end, parents can only hope their words of wisdom were the right ones.

Situations: Parental concerns about adult children living together and the differences between mothers/fathers and sons/daughters as they come closer together and view life. Of course, there's a happy ending for all involved.

Language: It is a realistic play about modern relationships. No one in the play is overly profane, but the occasional word does pop out.

We think this play is suitable for: Anyone who loved the smash hit “Nana’s Naughty Knickers” will love this romantic comedy by the same author. Also great for any boomers whose babies are all grown up and who see their own ideas coming back to haunt them! Perfect for anyone who wants to see a funny and touching show that will make you laugh out loud and fall in love all over again.

We think you should avoid this play if: The idea of a boy and girl living together before they are married, or the odd swear word really bothers you.

If this were a movie, it would be rated: PG-13
